The Poet's Corner

Blank pages

Started off looking at the empty expanse of the white page the unlimited limits it bade for my imaginative mind, alas, one's own imagination is only as willing as one's field of thinking wanting to say things to quell this constant banging on my head yet things seem to lack when faced with the horror of the blank page do i dive into the expanse of love and how it's been bad to με, or better yet, how i've been bad to it? not even a single letter seems to come to mind do i dive into what life has to offer and what i wish i had to offer it in return? nothing; as though apollo himself had picked me out in hopes of killing whatever form of poetry a measly mortal like me could conjure up nothing would help but, nothing could possibly stop what the mind has to give, expect death so, for as long as i draw breath, against the blank pages do i constantly wage war in hopes to win each endless repeating battle against its might and force.
